The livestock sector demands university graduates who have the right innovative skills and capabilities for a challenging future. University teachers have the responsibility to create learning opportunities for their students to build these capacities and skills.

‘Learning together’ is a 3-day intensive workshop for university teachers who want to link their university training more effectively to the livestock sector. We will achieve the following learning outcomes:

• Identify and characterize the stakeholders in the livestock sector you as a university teacher want to work with.
• Discuss your current lectures and propose ways to link them to stakeholders in the livestock sector.
• Explore learning designs and didactic strategies beyond the classroom - such as problem based learning, student action research, inverted classroom and expert panels.
• Present and share your new proposals for linking university teaching to the livestock sector.

Trainer: Lorenz Probst, Dr. Mag., University of Natural Resources and Life Sciences Vienna

Lorenz has a passion for creating learning opportunities. His teaching focuses on innovation and facilitation of change. He has coordinated transdisciplinary university courses and facilitated workshops on learning in Austria, Indonesia, Ethiopia and Uganda.